(DOC) Perspectives on Modernity: Habermas and Lyotard ...

Habermas's concept of the Enlightenment, which he admits is taken from Weber, holds that the segmentation of reason into the three spheres of science, morality and art are a direct consequence from a subjective criticism of an authoritative metaphysical world view espoused by the combination of state machinations and religious doctrine. The separation of these areas led to a greater distance Habermas, Lyotard & Discourse A Critical Essay on the ...

The modern versus postmodern debate has occupied a large and important role in political and social theory over the last half decade, engendering significant discussions regarding the nature of truth, legitimacy, rationality and consensus in political discourse. Jurgen Habermas and Jean-Francois Lyotard, two of the most influential social theorists of the late 20th century, have been central figures in this debate. Habermas, Lyotard and Political Discourse 1 - Reason Papers

Lyotard arguing that all talk of criteria is hopelessly metaphysical, and Habermas arguing that such criteria are indispensable for any social theory capable of legitimation and critique.² After outlining the terms of the debate and the respective positions of these two

Habermas | SpringerLink

Habermas's most recent work, The Theory of Communicative Action, makes a major claim: to be able to determine what, in any imaginable case, would be the rational thing to do. It does so by proposing a method of speaking which, Habermas believes, if only all speakers would be willing to adhere to it, would provide us all with a way of deciding in what the rational outcome would consist. The
