Memory Processes - The Human Memory

Memory is the ability to encode, store and recall information. The three main processes involved in human memory are therefore encoding , storage and recall (retrieval). Additionally, the process of memory consolidation (which can be considered to be either part of the encoding process or the storage process) is treated here as a separate process in its own right.

Long-Term Memory - Types of Memory - The Human Memory

Long-term memory is, obviously enough, intended for storage of information over a long period of time. Despite our everyday impressions of forgetting, it seems likely that long-term memory actually decays very little over time, and can store a seemingly unlimited amount of information almost indefinitely.
