Arguing that international institutions help Brussels pressure member states to adopt policies they might oppose, it suggests that the EU is more open to such outside influence when this expands Brussels's own governance spheres. The Influence of International Institutions on the EU thus opens up an array of new questions and ideas about the EU in the world.

Abstract. The promotion of effective multilateralism is allegedly a key objective of the European Union's foreign policy. Over the last twenty years, the relationship between the European Union and international institutions has become more sustained and consistent (J rgensen, 2009: 188), as it has become a popular topic for research.
